“The idea that one has understood a passage of scripture finally and completely, has drawn out all that God meant in it, is equivalent to denying that it is the word of God and inspired by him. For the effect of inspiration is not to be seen principally in the absence of error in scripture, which is only a by-product of inspiration—many a book is free from error without thereby being inspired. Inspiration involves a permanent quality, in virtue of which the Holy Spirit as auctor primaries is always behind the word, always ready to lead to deeper levels of divine truth those who seek to understand his word in the Spirit of the Church, the Spirit she possesses as Bride of Christ. The primary content of scripture is always God himself. Whether it is narrating historical events, enunciating laws or relating parables, God is speaking and speaking about himself, telling us what he is and about the manner in which he surveys and judges the world. To penetrate into the spirit of scripture means to come to know the inner things of God and to make one’s own God’s way of seeing the world.”
